General Program Information

Mission
The mission of the program is to provide an academic foundation and an experiential learning opportunity in the area of human services. Students will learn to creatively blend the professional knowledge, skills and values necessary to meet the ever-changing needs of individuals and of our communities.

Outcomes
All of the Human Services Program Certificates and Associate Degree outcomes are aligned with the generic competencies from the National Organization of Human Services (NOHS.) The generic competencies are developed further in the practicum setting. The GERO coursework is aligned with the Association of Gerontology in Higher Education (AGHE) competencies. The SOWK coursework is aligned with the Council on Social Work Education (CSWE) competencies. Lansing Community College essential learning outcomes are also taught across the curriculum. All outcomes are available for review from the Human Services Program Director upon request.

Human Services Work
Human services workers are individuals with specialized training as a helping professional. They assist human services professional staff, such as social workers or psychologists. They may hold a variety of positions in group homes and halfway houses; in mental health and correctional centers; in family, child and youth service agencies. Positions are also found within programs concerned with addiction, family services, domestic violence and aging to name a few. Their role may include helping others obtain services, organize or lead group activities, assist clients in mastering everyday living skills, monitor and keep records, or oversee group home residents. Job titles may include: social service technician, case management aide, community outreach worker, residential counselor, eligibility specialist or mental health technician.

Aging Studies is the study of the aging process. People who focus their careers in social gerontology are concerned with the older person’s relationship with society. People who focus their careers in geriatrics deal with the health and wellness needs of older people. Aging Studies includes other human services related professions such as social work, recreation, health, economics, law, public administration, and adult education. State and federal programs, along with nonprofit organizations provide a number of social service programs to assist the elderly.
Program Information
The Associate Degree in Human Services is an open enrollment program designed to provide students with skills needed to enter the human services field as well as to further their education and professional development. For persons already employed in the field, it provides an opportunity to strengthen knowledge and skills to work more effectively with others and opens new job opportunities. In addition, the program can assist students who are planning to enter undergraduate schools in many human service areas. The degree is generalist in nature. All students receive an education in addiction, aging, family, and human services. Students demonstrate their learned skills and interviewing techniques during a ten hour a week, consecutive two-semester, supervised practicum in a human services agency specific to their interest when working on the Certificate of Achievement and the Associate Degree

- Addiction: HUSE 112 and HUSE 242 are required for a practicum placement related to addiction. Contact the Michigan Certification Board for Addition Professionals (MCBAP) for information on credentialing.
